These devices are designed to facilitate web browsing using a touch screen input. Function keys are a user input device that is commonly found on keyboards, as well as other input devices, such as remote controls. Function keys are typically located at the top-right corner or bottom-right corner of a keyboard. These 'hot' or topmost keys can be pressed by a user without the user needing to take their finger off the virtual 'home' key ("Super" button) for the Home Page in a web browser. After a function key has been pressed, they typically stay 'hot' until they are pressed again (i.e., released) or moved off-screen. Accordingly, while this arrangement is convenient for a user that is using a mobile device, it has the disadvantage of requiring the user to press more function keys to reach a particular web page than is necessary if only the Home Page was already specified, but no other web pages were specified. For example, if the user clicks the Home Page and only then specifies the desired web page, the user will have to press two function keys to reach the desired web page because of the extra pressing of the function keys while on the Home Page. These extra function keys add additional user input for a device that may already be having problems with user input due to the screen size, ba244e880a
