The medallists were Norwegian, Christian Fallot Olsen and Russian Anatoly Matveyev. Etymology The first Olympic Games of 1896 in Athens were called the Games of the Ist Olympiad in reference to the original Olympic games of 776 BC, and the 1896 Games were therefore called the Games of the IIIrd Olympiad. But with the first modern Olympic games, in 1908, it was decided to designate the first four games by the name of the local Olympic truce. The 1906 Olympics were thus called the Games of the V Olympiad, and the second were the

Games of the IVth Olympiad. This was chosen in reference to the 1904 games in St. Louis, which were the Games of the IVth Olympiad. Since 1912 the four annual Olympiads are called the "classic" Olympiads, and 1896 was the games of the IIIrd Olympiad, since 1908 the 1904 games of St. Louis were the games of the IVth Olympiad, and this was followed in 1908 by the games in London. Thus 1896 would be the games of the IIIrd Olympic truce, since 1908 the games of the IVth Olympiad, and so on. First modern Olympics History Attendance The

1896 Athens Games were the first of the modern Olympics, and the first international competition of modern athletics. Around 100,000 people are said to have attended the opening ceremony, and a crowd of perhaps 120,000 turned out for the track and field events. Sporting events The sports contested in the 1896 games were: Hurdles 100 metres Long jump High jump Shot put Standing long jump Javelin throw Hammer throw Pentathlon Running high jump Running long jump Running pole vault Cycling Road cycling Track cycling Olympic marathon Boxing
