The first lesson about image editing I have for you is to understand that one image can have many layers. Just as in the real world, different parts of an image can have different properties, or be enhanced by different parts. A person's face can be enhanced by hair, a nose, glasses, or other hair-colored items and/or colors on the clothes. Although Photoshop is used to create and enhance images, it is not limited to that single purpose. Different types of images require different types of editing — the number and types of layers will determine the outcome. For example, a designer can create a layered retouching effect on a photograph of a model's face; whereas a more experienced editor can manipulate a digital painting (see Chapter 4 for more on digital paintings). You can achieve both of these results in a single photo by using the right tools. Creating a JPG A photo or scanned document file must be saved to the uncompressed Graphics Interchange Format (commonly known as a JPG file) to be printed in most color printers. It's easy to lose any image in file storage because the file format can't be recognized by most image viewers or programs. So before you take your photograph out of your camera or scanner and store the file, make sure you save the file format to the image. Follow these steps to save a copy as a JPG file:

1. Open your photograph.
2. From the File menu, choose Save As or click the New button and choose JPEG from the drop-down menu that appears. This step opens a new document window in which you can save your new image.
3. Save the image to your hard drive, and then continue. Make sure that the file type option is set to JPEG. Also check that the resolution is set to a reasonable level to retain the finest details. If you have the ability to increase the resolution, try it. For the best results, use the highest setting.
4. Click the OK button, and a window will appear, telling you that the file has been saved with the JPEG format and noting the file size. Remember the date, time, and file size; you may want to save your images in the same folder as the rest of your photographs. You can increase the file size by shrinking the image resolution to a lower size. In the Save As dialog box, you need to work with the

The ongoing travails of President Park Geun-hye has only served to cement her status as one of South Korea's most polarizing public figures. Park has faced unprecedented criticism for her handling of a corruption scandal involving her longtime friend Choi Soon-sil, her blatant attempts to manipulate political life in the country, and the failure of the military to uphold its end of the justice system as relations between Park and the democratic opposition simmer. But despite everything, South Koreans have long made a habit out of worshipping any public figure willing to serve as their protector, regardless of whether they are competent. This is despite the growing ranks of South Korea's critical voices. On Wednesday, a new trend emerged from the ranks of Park's base: the cult of the living. As many citizens began to think about the man who will succeed Park when she steps down from the presidency in February, a growing number began to express their unshakable loyalty. Choi Ham-sik, chairman of the National Policy Research Institute, which is run by Park's former friend Choi Soon-sil, said on Wednesday that "Choi has only been saying negatives to the living [President Park], but his intention is to become a living president after Park. Choi knows the military better than I do. If he is a living president, I wish that he leads the nation well." On Saturday, Min Byung-keun, a former ambassador to the United States and one of Park's close confidantes, said in an interview with the JoongAng Ilbo that "President Park is the only one in South Korea who can lead the nation for the next 10 years. She has a great responsibility." Even the nation's top-selling news site, Naver, printed the name "Choi" in the headline of an article on Saturday. Only a few days ago, that same site linked to a baseless rumor that the leader of Moon Jae-in's Democratic Party is Choi, rather than the leader of the opposition Liberty Korea Party. Choi's name has likewise been written in heart-shaped letters in residents' front door signs in South Korea's biggest cities, and he is also being seen in many mass-produced goods and retail establishments. In one online community, there was a discussion about how to personally thank Choi, but his followers soon erased the thread.

The effect of the pallidal DBS on prehension movements and intralimbic vestibular projections in monkeys. Selective destruction of the internal globus pallidus (GPi) was induced in two rhesus monkeys (Macaca mulatta) to assess the contribution of this structure in the pathophysiology of Parkinson's disease. Functional effects of the pallidal DBS (using 2 or 3 mm below the estimated GPi/subthalamic nucleus border) were studied and compared to normal values. GPi-DBS evoked dyskinesias on 20% (1/5) of side-support (intralimbic) and 60% (3/5) on contralateral side-support (extralimbic). The dyskinesia severity (severity score +/- SD) was 1.0 +/- 0.5 (pallidal DBS), 3.0 +/- 0.0 (sham) and 2.0 +/- 1.3 (medial septal nuclei-DBS) (higher DBS threshold). GPi-DBS induced dyskinesias on 100% (6/6) of contralateral side-support and 60% (3/5) of ipsilateral side-support. The dyskinesia severity (scores +/- SD) were 2.0 +/- 0.8 and 2.5 +/- 1.1, respectively (higher DBS threshold). There was a significant association between the effect of pallidal DBS on dyskinesia severity (scores of dyskinesia) and ipsilateral side-support ($\chi^2=4.044$, $P=0.043$) but not contralateral side-support ($\chi^2=0.61$, $P>0.05$). Each monkey performed well during a series of eye-head movements (30 degree/s, 60 degree/s, 120 degree/s, 180 degree/s and 270 degree/s) with and without GPi-DBS. The horizontal force and horizontal displacement peak velocities were significantly reduced during fast eye-head movements with GPi-DBS compared to without GPi-DBS. Peak velocity of eye movement was significantly reduced during fast eye-head movements (60 degree/s, 120 degree/s, 180 degree/s and 270 degree/s) with pallidal DBS compared to with sham but not compared to control. These data suggest that GPi-DBS can induce
