The 'aprioristic' assumption of generality in personal life. This paper addresses the question of whether, in personal life, the problem of separating the general from the particular is solved a priori or by natural means. We show that this problem is never solved a priori for any kind of a cause, given the 'conceptual' nature of a priori knowledge. Moreover, we argue that this conceptual nature of prior knowledge prevents a person from ever judging whether his or her personal life has a sufficient degree of generality to gain access to the realm of the universal. At best, a person may be able to judge a personal life in terms of generality, provided that this judgement does not require conceptualising, but merely recognising. If this judgement of generality merely exists as a mental construction, however, it falls outside the realm of a priori knowledge. In this case a person is not in a position to know the generality of his or her personal life, for that would be a judgement of the whole, a construct that cannot be reduced to individual experiences.

Poll Dog park in future? Staff at Hurricane put their feedback on the N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission's draft management plan for the future of the dog park in Hurricane. What the Hounds Are Saying I wanted to thank everyone for their time and their input. We have many issues that we are still considering which should have a significant impact on the future of the dog park, and this feedback is being considered in that context. We are encouraged that there seems to be support in nearly every instance, especially in the issues of size, frequency, cleaning, and off-leash use. The next steps are to seek out expert opinion, conduct additional site visits to gain a better sense of the opportunities and impacts of these issues, and to finalize the draft plan in preparation for rezoning and development of the dog park. Much more information will be released in the very near future, including a public hearing where you will have the opportunity to speak before the N.C.
