Gales-Bassett syndrome: report of a case and review of the literature. Gale-Bassett syndrome is a rare condition characterized by seizures and intellectual disability with an unknown etiology. The authors describe a child with the clinical picture of GBS and provide a review of the existing literature. A female patient, born at term with a normal vaginal delivery, presented at 10 months of age with seizures, irritability, and growth deceleration. Seizures were marked by staring, rearing, inability to stand, and tonic movements of the upper limbs, accompanied by glottal stops. A complex partial seizure, with atonic features, followed by tonic posturing, was observed after awakening from a stuporous state. The EEG revealed paroxysmal activity in the bilateral frontotemporal regions. Hypertonia, muscular hypotonia, and delayed motor milestones were evident. A mildly dysmorphic face, mild brachycephaly, and low-set ears were observed. MRI revealed cerebellar atrophy. Chromosome analysis revealed a normal male karyotype. Early signs of psychomotor regression appeared, and the patient was unable to walk and repeat words at 11 and 15 months of age, respectively. At 2 years, her intellectual development reached the level of a 15-month-old child, with severe motor impairment, autistic-like behavior, and absence of speech. The growth rate was severely retarded. The differential diagnosis is discussed and the possible causes are reviewed. @import '/mixins/dialog'; .modal-container { width: 1024px; max-width: 100%; overflow: auto; } .modal { 55cdc1ed1c
