KEYMACRO is a software solution that allows you to automate your keyboard presses using one of the 64 Macro Key Settings. In other words, this program lets you assign specific keyboard functions, such as pressing different combination of buttons to perform a different action, or holding a key for different time to activate the same function as some other. User Interface and Functions: Once you start the software, the main window will appear, and you will be asked to enter the name of the project you want to use, after which you can choose the type of theme you want to use. The names of the various project templates are displayed on the right side. You can select the one you want to use and close it, or you can proceed to use the others. The text displayed at the top of the page, as well as the textboxes below, provide you with information about your computer, such as the time, RAM usage, available disk space, CPU usage, and operating system details. In the above example, the macro key buttons are in fact the “Q”, “W”, “E” and “R” keys. Each of the buttons can be assigned to a different macro function, such as “Play Song”, “Show Menu”, “Change Keyset” and so on. The setup window is pretty extensive and includes buttons to set the same function for up to 4 macros keys, which allows you to assign a specific function to any button of your keyboard. As you assign the function to the different buttons, you can enter a name for it, which can be anything you want. This can help you to track down which button did what later on. It is possible to display the macro keys on the keyboard, either by enabling or disabling the Show button on the left of the window. Macro function playback: Once you are done, you can press the “Play” button and you will be asked to select a macro function, after which the selected macro will be played.
