The thing about the superiority complex that enables the rise of the Men's Rights movement and its founder and guiding light, Richard Gardner, is that it's delusional. If we're truly superior to women, that would mean we'd be able to do anything and everything, and that's a horrifying thought. Gardner's view of women is the mirror image of a lot of "toxic masculinity" which emerged in the 70s but has only worsened as feminism has gained influence over men's rights movements, the culture at large, and, thus, much of the underclass. Because feminist identity politics seeks to repress masculinity, men must be masculine in order to resist, and the only way for them to be masculine is for them to be in opposition to women. It's a self-hatred that masquerades as logic and results in violence, the most recent manifestation being in the form of Elliot Rodger's rampage last year in Isla Vista, California. Much of the logic driving Men's Rights is egoistic, rooted in the instinctual need for validation and acknowledgement. What makes Gardner's work the most popular is that it is self-serving, and it's self-serving because he's been rejected by women. He proclaims that he is "not bitter, I feel sorry" for being a misogynist, and yet he uses "women hating" as a proxy for identifying misogyny. He says things like: "just wait till women are the dominant gender in the world. Then men will be emasculated." That may be supposed to be funny, but it's not. He's literally claiming that he is the oppressed group: the victim. This is the absurdity of men's rights thinking: if you're living in a cul-de-sac, it must be because the other folks around you don't like you, or they're keeping you from progressing, and that's why you have to fight them. Because this isn't a movement with fans, people who just like to hear what "they" have to say because they identify with it, it needs to be validated. If feminists are saying that men are victims, it's necessary to prove that that's not true, Increasingly, users are carrying out computing tasks using mobile communication devices, including portable computers, smartphones, and/or the like. Mobile communication devices may be prone to communication errors or other technological difficulties, and, as such, have less advanced capabilities than fixed-location or tethered (i.e., desktop) computers. Additionally, the increased availability of user-generated content, such as in social networks and other areas, has increased the demand for mobile computing. An increasing amount of user-generated content is shared within restricted collections of people that may not have any connection with or vested interest in the user-generated content. As such, the content may be less relevant than the user-generated

A nitric oxide (NO) independent pathway for the metabolic activation of ionizing radiation was identified, involving the oxidative metabolism of prostaglandin endoperoxide H(2) to the radioprotective active metabolite (RAD). The involved peroxidase may be reduced by products of lipid peroxidation, such as α-tocopherol, to yield trp-RAD, also radioprotective in microgram quantities. The microsomal redox enzyme NADPH-P450 reductase was suggested as the enzyme for trp-RAD formation. The radioprotective effect of trp-RAD is apparently larger than that due to the added amounts of lysyl-RAD in irradiated cells, suggesting that the major biological activity of trp-RAD might result from its direct free radical scavenging action rather than from indirect antioxidant activity of the products of its conversion in vivo, such as nitrosothiol.RSS: This posts is linked to the tag "Default.aspx.cs" Default.aspx.cs We get to the Default.aspx.cs file right away. The Default.aspx.cs file has control logic in it that is confusing to me at first. In the body of the Default.aspx.cs, there is a line that says: SqlConnection sqlConnection = new SqlConnection(ConfigurationManager.ConnectionStrings["GladysConnectionString"].ConnectionString); Notice the connection string in the above? Notice that it says "GladysConnectionString"... what is the connection string for the resource? GladysConnectionString. In this case
