DashO is a powerful and free application designed to protect your code from reverse engineering. DashO is a Java program that encrypts code into an executable file and implements a pre-defined series of algorithm to obfuscate the code. DashO is a versatile software that can be used to protect any kind of code. It has 4 main features: Encryption, Reverse Engineering, Rename and Instrumentation. For protection against reverse engineering, DashO has some advanced options such as class loader obfuscation, unused classes processing, instrumentation and encryption. Encryption You can enable the encryption option to protect your code against reverse engineering. With this option, DashO can use the very powerful algorithm to encrypt the code, protecting it from reverse engineering. Reverse Engineering This option can be used to protect your code against reverse engineering by removing class definitions and unused classes and members from the obfuscated code. If you protect your code against reverse engineering, then it won't be possible to view your code, and anyone trying to reverse-engineer your code will not be able to use the functionality of your classes and members. Rename DashO has options to rename the code using a preset script. This feature allows you to protect your classes and members from another version of your software or from any kind of re-compilation. The default preset script renames all the classes and members in the code of your app, but you can customize the rename script according to your own needs. Instrumentation As you know, it is possible to spy on a class at runtime, which means you can take a look at the code of a class. With this feature, you can protect a class from the fact that it is being monitored. Designed to protect all kinds of code DashO is a multi-platform application that can protect different types of code: Java Objective-C C/C++ C# C++/CLI Python JavaScript PHP If you want to protect your Java code from being reverse engineered, then you can use the DashO tool to encrypt your code. Here is the code while(flag==false) { for (int i=0; i="fig"}, right panel) and that the secondary LPS-induced antigen priming (Fig. 5{ref-type="fig"}, left panel) can also effectively prime for lymphocytes. The results are consistent with recent reports showing that CpG-induced OLP-like structures can induce OLP in the gut ([@B31]). The ability to prime for lymphocytes means that these structures are not only capable of priming for the microenvironment but also for the system as a whole. As there are several CpG ODNs and they are of different strengths and/or lengths, we believe the secondary effect is specific to CpG ODNs. The specificity is based on the fact that the CpG ODN is the only adjuvant to the membrane that induces secondary priming. CpG ODNs, because of their structural similarity to double-stranded DNA, can be recognized by receptors of the innate immune system ([@B32]). Antigen-induced, CD4^+^ T-cell responses are initiated when the T-cell receptor recognizes antigen presented by major histocompatibility complex molecules on the surface of antigen-presenting cells ([@B33]). Although a role for dendritic cells has not been established, it is a well-known fact that dendritic cells are the most potent professional antigen-presenting cells. Dendritic cells also express MHC class II and CD80 and CD86 co-stimulatory molecules that are required for T-cell activation ([@B34], [@B35]). Although the primary response appears to be largely dependent on dendritic cells, the
