Fractures in the pelvis of children generally are the result of trauma, occurring in young children. CT scans are the recommended imaging study of choice for diagnostic evaluation and identification of osseous and soft-tissue injuries in pelvic fractures in children. Fractures of the pelvis can be divided into four categories: anterior pelvic ring injuries, both-column injuries, posterior ring injuries, and lateral compression injuries. Children with stable pelvic fractures have a greater chance of a complete recovery with less severe complications than children with unstable pelvic fractures.Q: How to get all rows with grouping SQL Server I have a table.
