Evaluation of a semi-nested polymerase chain reaction assay for the detection of respiratory syncytial virus in samples collected from patients with suspected viral respiratory infections. A semi-nested polymerase chain reaction (PCR) assay, targeting the fusion and hydrophobic glycoprotein gene sequences of respiratory syncytial virus (RSV), was evaluated for the detection of RSV in nasal secretions collected from patients with suspected respiratory viral infections. The assay specificity was confirmed using co-infection with other common respiratory viruses. The sensitivity of the assay was determined using specimens obtained from 13 patients with confirmed RSV-associated lower respiratory tract disease. The assay detected RSV in all but one of the RSV-positive specimens. The presence of both RSV and a second virus was demonstrated in five specimens, indicating the presence of multiple virus infections. These results demonstrate that a semi-nested PCR assay using primers designed from the fusion and hydrophobic glycoprotein gene sequences of RSV is a sensitive and specific method for detecting RSV in samples from patients with suspected RSV infections.
