Q: Matlab Import Error: file 'data' not found I'm having the following problem: I have a dataset from a microscope camera that is an (x,y,z) coordinates matrix. The time serie is given as an index, but for each pair of (x,y) I have the associated z coordinate. I read the file for the first time, and it works fine (only one line): data = [0 0 0 x1 y1 z1] However, after I close the file and re-open, I get the following error: error: file 'data' not found. Note: the file is there, in the same directory, and the path is correctly added to the path. I'm using the following script: In [2]: f = fopen('myfile.bin'); In [3]: x = fread(f,'uint32') In [4]: fclose(f); In [5]: x Out[5]: array([[0], [0], [0], [0], [0]]) Thanks for your help! A: The file needs to be on the path that MATLAB searches for data files. This can be found on the MATLAB documentation page for Datasets for more information. The present invention is directed to a new field, namely maneuvers performed in a gravitational environment. In the past, a large number of manned and unmanned free fall spacecraft maneuvers have been performed at high speeds and altitudes in the vicinity of the earth to test the engineering and operational capabilities of the spacecraft. These maneuvers have been conducted in well-defined manned flight simulation facilities. The maneuvers have generally been conducted in manned spacecraft where man-in-the-loop control has not been available to keep constant watch over the men and the spacecraft. A tremendous amount of computing power has been needed to provide accurate models for the simulations. The simulation models are extremely sophisticated and interactive with the environment and with the spacecraft. To date, there has been no attempted undertaking of manned, microgravity simulation exercises using a type of artificial gravity reference frame that is capable of withstanding the accelerations generated in the
