Am I really expected to pay money that I don't have? Why, in the name of all that is holy, does this ever happen? I can't speak to the holy named items, but I was able to take care of the holy named issue. The fine print I was referring to was buried underneath a letter to me from the company, at the bottom of the letter was the text below. I was never supposed to have to pay anything unless the company decided to shut down the site. Another thing they were stating in the letter was that I was to set up payment using PayPal. Well, they told me that in the first email I got when I signed up for the site. But, for some reason, they decided to not send the letter to me with that information so that I could follow the instructions they initially told me they would have that I am not supposed to have to pay anything. I have even called the 1-800 number for the company to explain, but the only action they have taken is to shut down the site. I don't know if that means anything, but they have it listed as a "closed account". But if I am not supposed to have to pay anything why are we fighting over it? If the only way to keep the account open and me from having to pay anything is to sign up for another site, then we have no business with the company. So is the fine print in the contract binding? Yes, it is binding. Can I get money even though I shouldn't be? Yes, you are legally required to pay. Does anyone else have a right to my data, even if I don't have to pay? Yes, technically they do. Can they keep my data? Yes, they can. Can I request my data? Yes, you can. Does it matter if I signed up for the site? No, the contract is binding. Does my
